Summary: Our conscience is like an inner witness that quietly records the direction of our actions. Even when the world does not question us, this inward awareness continues to observe and evaluate our choices. It does not always speak loudly, yet it carries a steady reminder of what aligns with integrity and what drifts away from it. In that sense, responsibility is not imposed solely by an external authority; it arises from within. The deeper we listen to this inner voice, the clearer it becomes that our choices leave traces within us. And ultimately, it is this conscience that holds us accountable to the truth we already know.

River, with your forceful currents, do not erode the banks, for such actions will be held accountable. This is a reminder that those in power must ensure they do not harm the vulnerable, as our conscience will hold us responsible.

Wherever the all-encompassing universal order determines the direction, it is there that it will flow. This insight shows that what seem like separate events often contribute to a larger unfolding that shapes our life journey. (84)

Essence: Sheikh Farid reveals that what seem like isolated events in our lives are often part of a larger story. What we assume as random or inconvenient moments gradually reveal subtle connections when we reflect on them. Triumphs, challenges, encounters, and farewells all contribute to this intricate design, like scattered pieces of a mosaic forming a complete image when put together. Thus, life is a continuous journey that unfolds along our path.
